Investigating and identifying suspects
through social networking sites

EXCLUSIVE! A must attend workshop for investigators who want to maximise the evidential potential from social networking sites.

The growing popularity of social networking sites has provided investigators with new opportunities for investigating and identifying suspects in crime cases.

The day will look at the legal implications of using intelligence gleaned from social networking sites and will focus on best practice around the following areas:

- Understanding social networking sites as an investigator
- Trying to identify a scam social networking account
- Getting the most from Twitter
- Getting the most from Facebook with the new graph search
- Tracing people on social networking sites

The day will be led by Neil Smith, a former police investigator who is now an investigative researcher and open source intelligence specialist who has trained thousands of investigators from UK police forces and across the world.

Neil will answer any questions or queries you might have about current cases and offer best practice advice. There is also the potential of more in-depth follow-up training with Neil.

THE VENUE

Rothley Court in Rothley

A beautiful 16th century manor house hotel with fantastic stained glass windows and oak panelling, set in around 10 acres of grounds.

The building's history has strong links to the Knights Templar and William Wilberforce's work to abolish slavery in the 1700s. Today's hotel features 30 en-suite bedrooms, which are located in both the main hotel and the court mews building, and three function rooms for up to 85 guests – as well as an open log fire and lovely, comfortable lounges.

Directions
